A: The "message length must be at least 127 bytes, received 30 bytes" refers to the PRIME-LEN header field, which is considered mandatory (actually requiring to be present and beginning a valid message for a session) in many protocols (such as SSH and TLS). So this response, which is 31 bytes, is clearly not what you expect it to be. However, even on top of that, the message contains a CRLF in the very first byte, and such a string is not considered valid for some protocols (such as SMTP). So you should probably verify the receiver's certificate once more to get some idea of where the connection went wrong. Dead Space 3 is out, the hype train is rolling, and I have a copy. It's been a few years since my last encounter with the sci-fi horror series, and, for the most part, it's an improvement. The first game was a fantastic, tense, atmospheric action-adventure that mixed hard sci-fi with some fantastic, tense horror. The sequel dropped the space jaunts and went straight into the deep. However, I have to say that I missed the franchise after my experience with the original. Dead Space 3 is a fantastic addition to the series and I'm looking forward to playing through it for a while. But don't take my word for it. Dead Space 3 is out on March 7th and there are some lucky folks who have already had their hands on it. Here's your chance to do some hands-on fun with the game. And on top of that, we're also giving away a code for all of the readers of the site. Being a fan of the franchise, I'm feeling very familiar with the style and feel of the game, but I wanted to go through the experience with a fresh perspective, so we're breaking things up into the following three sections: – First Impressions – The Gameplay – Environment/Scenery This allows you to get a feel for the game before the new content is added, as well as give you a fresh look at the game if you are considering it. Want a better look at the game? Read on for more details. First Impressions There's a lot to cover in this section and, while we're going to start with the surface level,
